

VYCC Food and Farm Program Community Health Leader

Program Overview

VYCC's Food and Farm Program is a youth development, diversified agriculture and food security initiative. We believe in the power that food has to connect us with the land, our community, and each other.

On the farm, young people engage in organic farming and culinary education. The produce grown by Corps Members is distributed to more than 400 families through the Health Care Share project-- a public health initiative that connects Vermont families to locally-grown produce through their medical provider. Patients who may have diet-related illness or have barriers to accessing fresh produce receive a weekly share of fresh food. We also raise laying hens for eggs, pigs for meat, and additional vegetables, flowers, and herbs that we sell through our vibrant, on-site farm stand.

In addition to the work Corps Members do in the farm fields, they also spend time in the kitchen learning cooking skills. Working with the food they've grown, they explore different recipes and help prepare a daily lunch that is served to all farm crews, connecting the work in the fields to the food on their plates.

These projects are made possible through VYCC's partnership with AmeriCorps and SerVermont.

Position Summary

The Community Health Leader assists in the administration of the Health Care Share (HCS), supporting the logistics that allow over 400 Vermont families to receive shares during the summer and fall. Working with the Community Health Program Manager, the Community Health Leader will support all aspects of the Health Care Share from member enrollment and communications to weekly share packing and delivery. In the spring and fall, they will also spend time with their hands in the soil, learning farm skills.
