

VYCC Food and Farm Program Youth Crew Leader

Program Overview

VYCC's Food and Farm Program is a youth development, diversified agriculture and food security initiative. We believe in the power that food has to connect us with the land, our community, and each other.

On the farm, young people engage in organic farming and culinary education. The produce grown by Corps Members is distributed to more than 400 families through the Health Care Share project-- a public health initiative that connects Vermont families to locally-grown produce through their medical provider. Patients who may have diet-related illness or have barriers to accessing fresh produce receive a weekly share of fresh food. We also raise laying hens for eggs, pigs for meat, and additional vegetables, flowers, and herbs that we sell through our vibrant, on-site farm stand.

In addition to the work Corps Members do in the farm fields, they also spend time in the kitchen learning cooking skills. Working with the food they've grown, they explore different recipes and help prepare a daily lunch that is served to all farm crews, connecting the work in the fields to the food on their plates.

These projects are made possible through VYCC's partnership with AmeriCorps and SerVermont.

Position Summary

In the spring, Crew Leaders learn farm and leadership skills while guiding volunteer groups and participating in daily farm tasks. In the summer, Crew Leaders are paired with an Assistant Crew Leader to lead a crew of up to 8 high school-age youth through the daily work of growing food on the farm for 9 weeks. In the fall, Crew Leaders return to leading volunteers, harvesting for the Health Care Share, and preparing the farm for winter.
